"The LEADER'S EDGE" by drmichaelbell

Leadership comes with pressure by default, primarily, though not exclusively, because leadership has always involved making difficult choices. But today those choices are increasingly shaped by pressures that overlap and collide: economic dubiety, technological evolution, public scrutiny, institutional expectations, and the growing complexity of human need.

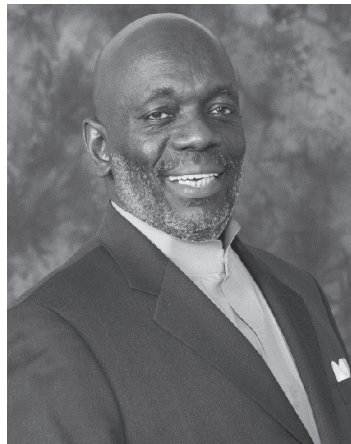

The needs are real, and the opportunities are always present. There's always another event, another conversation, another crisis, another decision, or another person who needs help. And for leaders, a single decision can carry strategic, human, relational, and reputational consequences. The line between professional judgment and personal responsibility can get blurry real fast.

There's the pressure of circumstances. Circumstances exist everywhere in life, and some circumstances are simply beyond the purview of our control. Maybe it's a debilitating illness, a tempestuous storm, an unstable job market, the loss of someone you love, or the one-sided ending of a relationship.

The important thing about circumstances is recognizing them for what they are and deciding what you're going to do next. Whatever the situation, it becomes the starting point from which you move forward. I can't recall who said it, but some smart somebody said, "Your present circumstances don't determine where you can go; they merely determine where you start."

Once a circumstance exists, you can't undo the fact that it happened. But how you respond to it isn't fixed in stone. Whether it's dealing with the schemes of a contrary ministry team member with a bad understanding or an opinionated critic who is never wrong, you still have choices. You can retreat in fear and cower before the circumstance, or you can face it, assess it, learn from it, and determine your next move.

Then there's the pressure of relationships. Leaders are people, and people want to be respected and liked. But leadership will eventually put you in situations where being faithful to your responsibility means disappointing somebody.

Pastors and ministry leaders who navigate conflict, competing expectations, difficult personalities, and longstanding relational tensions can easily become lightning rods for everybody's frustration. Sometimes you'll be blamed for problems you didn't create simply because leadership requires you to address them. Relationships may be among the most persistent pressures leaders face because leadership happens through people and people are complicated.

I must, however briefly, mention the pressure of performance. Pastors, worship leaders, and ministry leaders routinely experience the exhausting expectation to produce flawless worship, maintain attendance, grow ministries, solve problems, satisfy people, and somehow remain as inoffensive as possible while doing it.

So what's the antidote to pressure? Oddly enough, Scripture doesn't begin with escape. Psalm 119:143 says, "Trouble and distress have come upon me, but your commands give me delight." Another translation puts it this way: "As pressure and stress bear down on me, I find joy in your commands." That's important. The Psalmist doesn't deny the pressure. The pressure is real. The trouble is real. The distress is real. But pressure doesn't get the final word. Joy does.

Speak Life Thought

with Dr. Yolanda G. Butler

A Life of Compassionate Care

"You are always and dearly loved by God! So robe yourself with virtues of God, since you have been divinely chosen to be holy. Be merciful as you endeavor to understand others, and be compassionate, showing kindness toward all. Be gentle and humble, unoffendable in your patience with others." (Colossians 3:12 TPT)

As I pen this Speak Life Moment, I am preparing to receive my precious 100-year-old mother in love back into my home under hospice care. For almost 20 years, Mother Rosie has lived with me and my husband in her latter years of life. I have observed and watched her transition from a spunky, always well-dressed woman with matching purse, shoes, and hats, to now one who relies upon the compassionate care of others to take care of her until her final breath on this earth.

Being a caregiver takes literally everything mentioned in the devotional scripture. Life as a caregiver has taught me much over the years. I want to share a few simple words of wisdom with my fellow caregivers and others who may find themselves in a similar situation.

1. Self-care. Take off weariness and put on freshness. Before you begin to take care of others, take care of yourself, naturally and spiritually. Spiritually, begin each day with prayer and anoint yourself with anointing oil. Speak the Word over your life that you can do all things through Christ, who gives you grace and strength. Naturally, get rest, eat well-balanced meals high in protein, balanced carbs, and low in fat. This keeps the body energized and healthy, and the mind alert. Add any necessary supplements. Your immune system can become weakened if you do not get enough rest and proper nutrition.
2. Seek help. If you need help, ask. Do not think you can do it all by yourself—that's selfish. Take off that pride and put on humility. Sometimes family is not always available or lives nearby, as is in my situation. Prayerfully, seek out help from church family, close friends, and neighbors.
3. Saturate. Flowing in compassion with gentleness and humility cannot be done in your own strength. It will wear you out, especially as your loved one becomes weaker and more dependent on you. Let Holy Spirit empower you with the Father's grace, peace, mercy, and strength you need to be the chosen caregiver He anointed you to be. Remember, ber, His strength becomes your strength.

4. Sovereignty. As you witness the Father graciously and gently cradle your loved one to their heavenly home, be comforted in knowing that there shall be no more toil, no more pain, no more sickness, and no more labor, for the Father's child shall receive a crown of righteousness and eternal rest in His presence.

You have been divinely chosen to lovingly serve as a compassionate caregiver. So, dear hearts, be determined to be well dressed in compassion as you flow in kindness, gentleness, humility, and patience.

What Family Really Means

Family. It's a word that carries so much weight, yet its meaning often goes far beyond bloodlines and legal ties. As a pastor, mental health advocate, and author, I've witnessed firsthand how diverse and transformative the concept of family can be.

True family isn't solely defined by genetics or shared last names—it's about the love, support, and connection that bind people together.

Family: A Sanctuary of Love

At its core, family is a refuge. It's the place where we find love in its purest form—a love that nurtures, forgives, and empowers. A real family doesn't just accept you for who you are; they celebrate you, flaws and all.

In a world that can often feel harsh and isolating, family is the shelter we return to. It's where we learn life's most valuable lessons: the importance of kindness, the beauty of patience, and the power of unconditional love.

Beyond Bloodlines

While traditional families are built on biological ties, the real meaning of family extends far beyond that. Families can be formed in unexpected ways—through adoption, friendship, mentorship, and community.

I've encountered countless individuals who have created families from friends, neighbors, or even coworkers. These relationships are proof that family isn't about where you come from; it's about who walks beside you on your journey.

One individual I counseled shared this insight: "My family isn't the one I was born into—it's the one I chose. They've stood by me in ways I never imagined, and that's what family truly means."

The Role of Forgiveness and Grace

No family is perfect. Disagreements, misunderstandings, and even betrayals can strain relationships. Yet, it's in these moments that the real meaning of family shines.

Family is where we learn to practice forgiveness, to extend grace even when it's difficult. It's about choosing to love each other despite differences, knowing that the bonds we share are stronger than any conflict.

Mental Health and Family Dynam-

we are all part of God's family, united by His love. This spiritual family transcends earthly ties, reminding us that we are never alone.

In church communities, I've seen how people come together to support one another, acting as a family to those who are lonely or in need. These relationships are a beautiful example of what it means to be family in action.

Conclusion: Family Is What You Make It

The real meaning of family isn't limited to who you share DNA with—it's about the connections that feed your soul. Family is where you find belonging, where love is freely given, and where you are reminded that you matter.

Whether it's the family you're born into, the one you choose, or the one you create, family is a gift. It's a reminder that no matter how hard life gets, there will always be people who stand by your side.

As we navigate life, may we all strive to build families—biological or chosen—that reflect the best of humanity: love, compassion, forgiveness, and grace. After all, family is not just what we have; it's what we nurture, cherish, and build together.

As a mental health advocate, I've seen how family dynamics can profoundly impact our emotional well-being. A supportive family can be a source of strength during life's challenges, offering encouragement and understanding when we need it most.

Conversely, strained family relationships can create feelings of isolation and stress. This is why fostering healthy communication, setting boundaries, and prioritizing emotional health within families is so important.

A Family of Faith

For me, family is also deeply rooted in faith. The Bible teaches us that

A Living Will - For Your Family's Well Being

A living will is a legal document that ensures your healthcare wishes are followed when you cannot communicate them, providing clarity for both medical providers and loved ones.

What a Living Will Is

A living will is a type of advance directive that specifies your preferences for medical treatment if you become unable to make decisions due to illness, injury, or incapacity.

Unlike a traditional will, which deals with property and estate matters, a living will focuses solely on healthcare decisions, including life-sustaining treatments, resuscitation, mechanical ventilation, artificial nutrition, and hydration.

It can also include instructions about organ donation, palliative care, and spiritual or religious considerations.

Key Benefits

Maintains Personal Autonomy: A living will allows you to remain in control of your medical care, ensuring your wishes are respected even if you cannot speak for yourself.

Reduces Family Conflict: By clearly stating your preferences, it prevents disagreements among family members and reduces emotional stress during critical moments.

Guides Healthcare Providers: Doctors and medical staff can follow your instructions, avoiding unnecessary or unwanted treatments and ensuring care aligns with your values.

Provides Peace of Mind: Both you and your loved ones gain reassurance knowing that decisions are pre-determined and legally documented.

Practical Considerations

Legal Recognition: Each state has specific laws regarding living wills, including requirements for witnesses or notarization, so it is important to follow local regulations.

Healthcare Proxy: You can appoint a trusted person as a healthcare agent to make decisions on your behalf if needed, complementing the living will.

Comprehensive Planning: A living will should cover a range of scenarios, from terminal illness to comas or severe injury, and include preferences for treatments like CPR, mechanical ventilation, and pain management.

Why It Matters

Many people are unable to communicate their wishes at the end of life, and without a living will, decisions may fall to family members or courts, potentially causing conflict or legal disputes.

A living will ensures that your voice is heard, your values are respected, and your family is spared unnecessary stress during difficult times.

It is a proactive step in advance care planning, helping you prepare for unexpected medical situations at any age.

In summary, a living will is a crucial document for anyone who wants to maintain control over their medical care, protect their loved ones from uncertainty, and ensure that their end-of-life wishes are honored.

The historic Baker Funeral Home marks 100 years of caring for Fort Worth

Fort Worth City News

A Pullman porter for the Santa Fe Railroad, James Nathan Baker Sr. was a man in search of a better way to support his growing family.

Baker always encouraged other Blacks to become entrepreneurs. Following his own advice, he resigned from the railroad and went into partnership with his mother-in-law, Mattie Gaston Barnes, in their mutual hometown of Cleburne. There were no funeral homes for Blacks in Cleburne, so he and Barnes started Baker Funeral Home Inc. in the summer of 1917.

In 1922, Baker was licensed by the state of Texas as an embalmer. That same year, he hired his first full-time employee, Argoldia Sedalia Smith.

In his travels, Baker noticed that like in Cleburne, there were no funeral homes for Blacks in Fort Worth. In 1926, Baker opened Baker Undertaking Co. at 301 E. Rosedale St. in a two-story house owned by his father, the Rev. Henry Baker, founder of Baker Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church. (The church started at the funeral home location and later moved to 1050 E. Humbolt St.) Rev. Baker died in 1944 but was able to see his son become a successful funeral home operator.

Baker Funeral Home continued to grow in the 1930s. After a building expansion, Baker added a community ambulance service in 1932, and his brother opened a third funeral home, in Mineral Wells, in 1935. Together, the three businesses served African Americans across the region.

In 1938, Baker founded the Diamond Mutual Burial Association, which helped clients plan for funeral arrangements. Baker also started People's Burial Park, selling cemetery property at reduced costs.

The funeral home on Rosedale Street was once again re-modeled and enlarged.

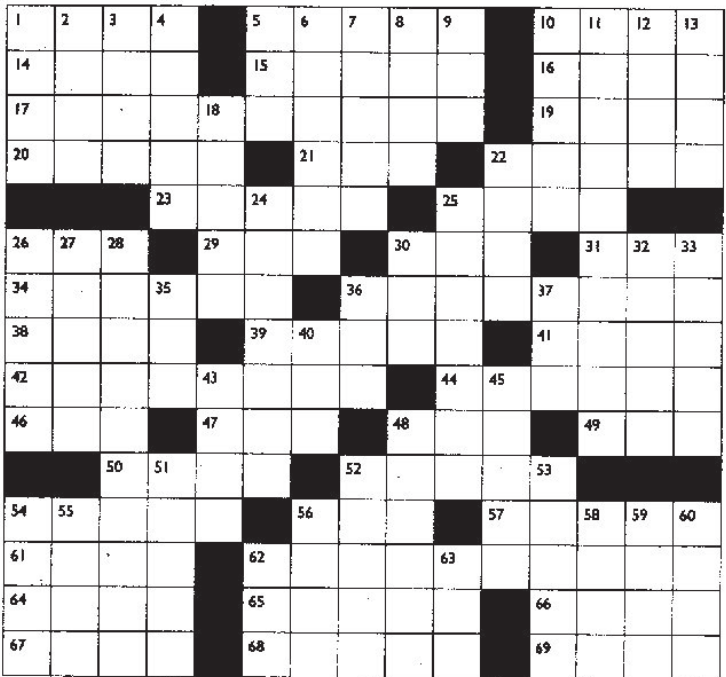

Baker's seven children had always helped the business. He retired in 1967, and after his death in 1970, his son Herbert Victor Baker became president. Under his leadership, the business continued to grow.

In 2004, Baker Funeral Home was recognized as a Texas Historic Landmark, and a marker was erected on the Rosedale property on the fringes of the Medical District.

Today, Baker Funeral Home is owned and operated by the third and fourth generations of family members who continue to uphold James Baker's commitment to service.
